FROM POPE FRANCIS

Living in a world in crisis

Perhaps "those of us who have a reasonably comfortable life don't know how to weep. Some realities in life are only seen with eyes cleansed by tears. I would like each of you to ask yourself this question: Can I weep? Can I weep when I see a child who is starving, on drugs or on the street, homeless, abandoned, mistreated or exploited as a slave by society? Or is my weeping only the self-centred whining of those who cry because they want something else?" Try to learn to weep for all those young people less fortunate than yourselves. Weeping is also an expression of mercy and compassion. If tears do not come, ask the Lord to give you the grace to weep for the sufferings of others. Once you can weep, then you will be able to help others from the heart.

At times, the hurt felt by some young people is heart-rending, a pain too deep for words. They can only tell God how much they are suffering, and how hard it is for them to keep going, since they no longer believe in anyone. Yet in that sorrowful plea, the words of Jesus make themselves heard: "Blessed are those who mourn, for they shall be comforted" (Mt 5:4). Some young men and women were able to move forward because they heard that divine promise. May all young people who are suffering feel the closeness of a Christian community that can reflect those words by its actions, its embrace and its concrete help.

It is true that people in power offer some assistance, but often it comes at a high price. In many poor countries, economic aid provided by some richer countries or international agencies is usually tied to the acceptance of Western views of sexuality, marriage, life or social justice. This ideological colonization is especially harmful to the young. We also see how a certain kind of advertising teaches young people to be perpetually dissatisfied and contributes to the throwaway culture, in which young people themselves end up being discarded.

Our present-day culture exploits the image of the young. Beauty is associated with a youthful appearance, cosmetic treatments that hide the traces of time. Young bodies are constantly advertised as a means of selling products. The ideal of beauty is youth, but we need to realize that this has very little to do with young people. It only means that adults want to snatch youth for themselves, not that they respect, love and care for young people.

Some young people "find family traditions oppressive and they flee from them under the impulse of a globalized culture that at times leaves them without points of reference. In other parts of the world, even more than generational conflict between young people and adults, there is mutual estrangement. Sometimes adults fail, or do not even try, to hand on the basic values of life, or they try to imitate young people, thus inverting the relationship between generations. The relationship between young people and adults thus risks remaining on the affective level, leaving its educational and cultural aspects untouched". What harm this does to young people, even though some do not notice it! Young people themselves have remarked how enormously difficult this makes the transmission of the faith "in some countries without freedom of speech, where young people are prevented from attending Church".

[Pope Francis, apostolic exhortation, CHRISTUS VIVIT —to the young people and the entire people of God]

FROM FR. HENRY DUC

At the wake of my Dad's funeral more than ten years ago, one of my brothers brought to my attention about a stranger sitting at the table reserved for our special guests, and I was tasked with the hard job to talk to the man. After double checking with my family members to make sure he wasn't a friend of any of ours, I put on a pastoral look to approach him with no intention other than asking him to move to another table. He was a bit frightened at first for thinking that he was about to be thrown out of the gathering, however, as I gently told him that he was most welcomed to join us, and that the table he was sitting had been reserved for senior members of my family, he was more than happy to stand up and move to another table.

I can't help recall such an encounter, as I read the Gospel this Sunday, particularly the part of the story warning people not to choose the best seat for themselves at social gatherings with the intention to show off. They might be very disappointed, because the seat might be allocated for someone else more important.

Through this striking story, Jesus means to encourage us his followers not to exalt ourselves, but always remain humble. He doesn't simply teach it, he literally showed us how to live it, especially by bending himself to wash the disciple's feet at the Last Supper.

A side point, no less important, could be found at the second part of the narrative, which challenges us to go against our natural habit. Naturally we tend to invite just people in our circle of family or friends to a party, here Jesus inspires us to go beyond that habitual boundary. He wants us to think of the under privileged, such as the poor, the crippled, the lame, the blind and include them in our guest list. In return for that, we shall be repaid not here and now, but later on in the world to come, with an everlasting and incorruptible reward of eternal life.

Let us pray today for the grace to keep all Church members, especially our leaders always straight on the path of humility, and also for the commitment to care more for the welfare of the needy worldwide.

Have a humility awareness week.

Fr. Henry
